The novel opens with Aunt Polly scowling the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the brush, discovers that his hands are covered with paint, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, “Look behind you!” and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects wistfully on Tom’s mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at supper time, his face colored red from running from the pickets. He tells her how he has been stopped school that afternoon and went swimming in the stream with a few boys. He has been heard and shown her that his collar is still wet from the water. Aunt Polly is satisfied, but Sam, Tom’s half brother, comes in black. Tom has sworn the shirt himself to disguise his face.

Tom goes out of the house to look for his shirt when he is a man of whistling. While wandering the streets of St. Petersburg, Tom is overheard and accused. Tom and the new arrival run a race to the river landing and eventually chase the newcomer all the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitewash the fence. Sam passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a ‘white alley,’ a kind of marble. Sam almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his labor.
